PREFATORY NOTE TO THE SECOND EDITION

The welcome which THE HOME BOOK OF QUOTATIONS has received is especially pleasing to its compiler because of the public's quick appreciation of what may be called its human quality. It was this quality which he worked hardest to achieve for what he was striving to produce was not merely another dictionary of quotations—a work of reference to be consulted on occasion—but a book with personality and interest, to be read, lingered over and enjoyed.

Another pleasant feature of the book's reception has been the general recognition of the fact that it is by no means dead and done with but is a living thing with endless possibilities of growth and improvement. It should grow better and wiser as it grows older and larger—each edition nobler than the last, like Dr. Holmes's nautilus. At least its compiler intends to try to make it so.

Already in the brief time which has elapsed since the final reading of the proofs for the first edition a surprisingly large amount of new material has become available. There is 'The Hoover's Forty Two Years in the White House, with its apparently well-based contention that Calvin Coolidge did not in the least mean his "I do not choose" to be taken as final. There is Stanley Walker's City Editor with its assertion that the famous "man bites dog" definition of news was not an invention of Charles A. Dana as generally supposed nor of his city editor John B. Bogert as Frank O'Brien, the present editor of the Sun, believes but of Amos Cummings, another of Dana's editors. There is David Muzzey's life of Blaine with many citations, one of which sent the compiler digging back in to the pages of the Congressional Globe for April 30, 1876 to read for his own pleasure an account of one of the most amusing orgies of recrimination which ever took place on the floor of the House. There is the assertion by H. G. Wells in Liberty for December 27, 1914 "I launched the phrase 'The War to End War'." These are only examples of a mass of material in almost every item of which a nugget or two may be turned up by careful digging.

Most valuable of all have been the suggestions from readers and reviewers. Almost everyone has his favorite quotations and when any of them have been found missing from this collection its compiler has been promptly informed—exactly as he had hoped he would be. A number of these suggestions have been included in the present edition; such errors corrected as have been discovered; certain ambiguities with their many new references added to the Concordance; and definite directions given for forty or fifty additional names in the Index of Authors. These are but the first steps in a sort of continuous life process of renewal and regeneration which will carry on indefinitely.

It should be noted that the word "similar" has been carefully excluded from the title of this book. Apart from the fact that the phrase "similar quotations" is all but meaningless it is surely the duty of a compiler to rescue from obscurity sayings which deserve to be preserved either because of their own merit or because they indicate the origin and development of those more widely known. The present compiler has spent a great deal of time in searching for such sayings and also in retrieving hundreds of others which have hitherto been considered too trivial or too vulgar to merit attention for he has felt that "hiccups" and "bonchaid" and "stuffed shirt" deserve a place here no less than "magnanimousness."

PREFATORY NOTE TO THE THIRD EDITION

THE third edition, THE HOME BOOK OF QUOTATIONS reaches what is, in essentials, a definitive form. It has been checked through for errors from end to end, nearly a thousand quotations have been added, explanatory notes have been rewritten and where necessary expanded, the APPENDIX, INDEX OF AUTHORS has been revised and the space for citation of quotations under each writer raised from forty to one hundred and fifty, and, finally, the CONCORDANCE has been nearly doubled in size by the addition of approximately fifty thousand entries. Four hundred of the political phrases and of popular references have been added to those quoted in earlier editions, and innumerable minor changes in text and arrangement have been made.

In a word, the editor has done everything he could to improve the book. Of course he expects to keep polishing away at it, but future changes will be very largely confined to the correction of such errors as may hereafter be discovered, and to the addition in the APPENDIX of such new material as may demand inclusion.

There has been much inquiry from English users of the book as to why English spelling was used throughout, since it is used in only about half of the quotations, but in this the editor followed what seemed to him the only logical method, and used the spelling which the writer himself used. This means, of course, English spelling for English writers and American spelling for American ones. Since the editor is himself an American, he has naturally used American spelling for the notes and for translations from foreign languages. With a few of the older writers, such as Chaucer, the spelling has been sufficiently modernized to make it intelligible to the average reader, and obsolete spellings have been dropped except in cases where there is a special point in retaining them.

During the two years which have elapsed since the first edition was published, the editor has had the benefit of criticisms and suggestions from hundreds of readers both in this country and in England, with the result that many omissions have been repaired, uncertainties concerning the origin of a considerable number of quotations have been cleared up, and three or four hoaxes have been uncovered. For the assistance he is most grateful.

June 15, 1937.

PREFATORY NOTE TO THE FIFTH EDITION

Advantage has been taken of the reprinting of THE HOME BOOK OF QUOTATIONS to make a number of corrections in the text, and to add certain quotations and phrases which have become current during the past few years, especially those which have arisen from World War II. These have been grouped at the end of the Appendix, and a separate index for them will be found at the end of the regular index. The biographical data have been brought up to date, and some new entries inserted in the index—all of which it is hoped, will increase the usefulness of the book.

THE HOME BOOK

SUGGESTIONS ■ ■ ■ ■ ■ QUOTATIONS

THE quotations in this book ■ arranged alphabetically by subject, and, under each subject, alphabetically by author, except ■ quotations which ■ merely variations of the ■ phrase ■ arranged chronologically, with dates ■ indicate priority of authorship

The more important subjects ■ divided ■ sections in which cognate quotations ■ grouped together This division follows ■ uniform plan, the first section comprising definitions of the subject, the second, apothegms about it, the third, praise, the fourth, criticism "Painting" is ■ example of this arrangement Sometimes instead of Praise and Criticism, ■ division ■ Virtue and Folly (as in "Ambition"), or Blessing and Curse (as ■ "Adversity"), ■ Compensations and Penalties (as in "Age") ■ purpose has been to set the quotations for and against any subject in ■ sort of deadly parallel, which will be found both interesting ■ amusing

The major subjects are still further divided, and ■ examination of the TABLE ■ CONCORDANCE will show that this has been carried ■ in considerable detail "Age," for example, has ■ sub-divisions, "Man" has nineteen, "Life" has thirty, and "Love" has thirty-seven, the purpose being ■ only to make any quotation ■ easy to find, but also to present to the reader all related quotations in a single group An elaborate system of ■ references works to the ■ end

In looking for ■ particular quotation, the reader should turn directly to the subject, if the subject ■ a short one, such ■ "Abstinence" ■ "Advantage" But if it ■ long one, the CONCORDANCE at the back of the book should be consulted Here the quotations are grouped by leading words and phrases, with a reference not only to the page, but to the number of the quotation ■ the page, so that it may be turned to instantly The CONCORDANCE is really a word-index to the quotations, and identifying words, with ■ few words of context are generously given, in order that ■ quotation which is ■ exactly remembered may be traced through ■ number of channels Detailed suggestions for the ■ of the CONCORDANCE will be found on the page preceding it, and these should be carefully read, as it is impossible to get the full benefit of this book unless one understands thoroughly how to use it

Key-words ■ sometimes incorrectly remembered, in which case, of course, the CONCORDANCE will be of no assistance, but there is another resource, provided the author of the desired quotation is known Preceding the CONCORDANCE is ■ INDEX ■ AUTHORS which gives the pages on which the quotations from the works of every author may be found—except in the ■ of a few authors, such as Shakespeare and Pope where the quotations ■ so numerous that to list them ■ this way would be an absurdity Full directions for the ■ of this index will be found ■ 2300, and should also be carefully read If ■ clue to the desired quotation can be found either ■ the CONCORDANCE ■ the INDEX ■ AUTHORS, the final resource ■ of course, to turn to the subject where it would naturally be found, and to run through the entries there

The great problem in ■ book such ■ this, aside from the basic ■ of including the widest possible range of quotations, accurately ■ and carefully classified, is to provide a system where any quotation may be found with a minimum of search, and the system outlined above is ■ best which the present compiler has been ■ to devise If it fails to turn up the quotation desired, he should be informed, ■ order that he may put the reader ■ the right track and remedy any defect which may ■

I—America Songs of Praise

O, Columbia, the gem of the ocean,
The home of the brave and the free,
The shrine of each patriot's devotion,
A world offers homage to thee

THOMAS A. BECKET, Columbia, the Gem of the Ocean Probably written in 1843 by Becket, a young English actor playing at the Chestnut Street Theatre, Philadelphia, for another English named David Taylor Shaw, who published it first as "written, composed and sung by David T. Shaw, and arranged by T. A. Becket, Esq.," and then Becket published it as "written and composed by T. A. Becket, and sung by D. T. Shaw." The song is said to have been taken to London by E. L. Davisport, and there under the title, Britannia, the Pride of the Ocean. Some authorities say that it was first by in England, and afterwards adapted by him to American use, but the second line, "the home of the brave and the free," is identical in both versions, and is so similar to a line in Star-Spangled Banner that it would seem to indicate that the American version was the first, though it is difficult to understand why should refer to a country as "America as a 'gem of the ocean,'" a phrase which would apply much more reasonably to an island than England (See BANKS, Immortal Songs of Camp and Field, p. 77, Notes Quæres, Aug. 1899)

As the British Constitution is the most subtle organism which has proceeded from the womb and the long gestation of progressive history, so the American Constitution is, so far as I see, the most wonderful work ever struck off at a given time by the brain and purpose of man.

W E GLADSTONE, Km beyond Sea (North American Review, Sept. 1878)

Some men look at Constitutions with sanctimonious reverence, and deem them like the of the covenant, too sacred to be touched. They ascribe to the men of the preceding age a wisdom than human, and suppose what they did to be beyond amendment. Laws and institutions must hand in hand with the progress of the human mind. CORPORATIONS

Corporations cannot commit treason, nor be outlawed, nor excommunicated, for they have souls

SIR EDWARD COKE, Case of Sutton's Hospital, 1612. (5 Rep 303; 10 Rep. b)

Lord Coke gravely informs us that corporations be excommunicated, because they have no souls, and they appear to be destitute of every feeling if they also no bowels. . . . There is in truth but one point through which they are vulnerable, that is the keyhole of their box.

GRORIUS, De Jure 1000 in Peds. Bk. li, ch. 9.

They feel neither shame, remorse, gratitude, nor goodwill.

WILLIAM HAZLITT, Table-Talk. Essay 27. Referring corporations.

When it is said that a corporation is immortal, we understand nothing more than that it is capable of indefinite duration.

STEWART KYD, On Corporations, p. 17.

I see in the near future a crisis approaching that unnerves me and me to tremble for the safety of my country. As a result of the war, corporations have been enthroned, and an era of corruption in high places follow. . . . I feel at this moment anxiety for the safety of my country than ever before, even in the midst of war.

Attributed to ABRAHAM LINCOLN, but not found in his works probably apocryphal.

As touching corporations, that they are invisible, immortal, and that they had no soul, therefore no subpoena lieth against them, because they have no conscience or soul.

SIR ROGER MANWOOD, Chief Baron of the Exchequer, 1592. (Dict. National Biography.)

The biggest corporation, like the humblest private citizen, must be held to strict compliance with the will of the people.

THEODORE ROOSEVELT, Speech, Cincinnati, 1902.

Did you expect a corporation to have a conscience, when it has no soul be damned and no body to be kicked?

EDWARD THURLOW. (SAMUEL JOHNSON, Life of Thurlow. Vol. ii, Appendix.)

Why, you never expected justice from a corporation did you? they have neither a soul to be damned nor a body to be kicked.

SYDNEY SMITH, quoting Thurlow. (Lady Holland, Memoir. Vol. i, p. 331, ch. 11.)

A corporation cannot blush. It has a body, is a head—a one every year; it has and very long for it can reach anything; . . . a throat swallow the rights of community, and a stomach to digest them! But who yet discovered, in the anatomy of any corporation, either bowels or a heart?

HOWEL WALSH, Speech, the Trades assizes. (WILLIAM HOWE, Table Book.)

CORRUPTION

Corruption is a tree, whose branches are of unmeasurable length; they spread everywhere.

BEAUMONT FLETCHER, Honest Man's Fortunes. Act iii, 3.

The Interpreter has them first into a room where a man who could look no way but downwards, with a muck-rake in hand. . . . The man did neither look up nor regard, but raked to himself the straws, the small sticks, and dust of the floor.

JOHN BUNYAN, The Pilgrim's Progress, li. This was the theme of President Roosevelt's speech at the dinner of the Gridiron Club in Washington, 17 March, 1906. Hence "muck-raker."

The men with the muck-rake are often indispensable to the well-being of society, but only if they know when to stop raking the muck.

THEODORE ROOSEVELT, Address, at Gridiron Club dinner, Washington, April, 1906.

Corrupt influence, which is in itself the perennial spring of all prodigality, and of all disorder.

EDMUND BURKE, Speech, House of Commons, 11 Feb., 1780.

Corruption, the most infallible symptom of constitutional liberty.

EDWARD GIBSON, Decline Fall. Ch. 21.

At length corruption, a general flood, (So long by watchful ministers withstood,) Shall deluge all; and avarice, creeping on, Spread like a low-born mist, and blot the sun.

POPE, Moral Essays. Epist. iii, l. 135.

So true is old saying, Corruptio optima pessima. (The best things corrupted become worst.)

SAMUEL PURCHAS, Pilgrims: To Reader: Of Religion. (1625) The "old saying" found in ST. THOMAS AQUINAS, Summa Soc., i, 5.

The Cardinal rose with a dignified look,
He call'd for his candle, his bell, and his book!
In holy anger, and pious grief

He solemnly cursed that rascally thief!
He cursed him at board he cursed him in bed,
From the sole of his foot to the crown of his head,
He cursed him in sleeping, that every night
He should dream of the devil, and wake in a fright,

He cursed him in eating, he cursed him in drinking,
He cursed him in coughing, in sneezing, in wink-
ing,

He cursed him in sitting, in standing in lying,
He cursed him in walking, in riding in driving,
He cursed him in living, he cursed him dying!—
Never was heard such a terrible curse!

It's a long time between drinks

The expression, 'It is too long between drinks,' is undoubtedly an invention. There is no record of its having occurred in any inference between governors of the Carolinas. My guess is that when a convivial party was having a good time one night and became a little slow, a booster of the party asked the question, 'What did the governor of North Carolina say to the Governor of South Carolina?' And when they all gave up, he furnished the answer "It is too long between drinks"—A S. Salley, Secretary Historical Commission of South Carolina, in a letter to the compiler, 28 May, 1932. The expression antedates the Civil War, and many stories have been invented to explain it, but none of them has any historical foundation. John Motley Morehead states that there is a legend in his family that his grandfather was the governor of North Carolina who made the historic remark. Another legend credits it to Zebulon Vance, governor of North Carolina. Hampton was governor of South Carolina.

Æsop, Fables: Fragments Frag 63

So the struck eagle, stretch'd upon the plam,
No more through rolling clouds to soar again,
View'd his own feather on the fatal dart,
And wing'd the shaft that quiver'd in his heart

Keen were his pangs, but keener far to feel
He nursed the punion which impell'd the steel,
While the same plumage that had warm'd his

Drank the last life drop of his bleeding breast
